

Understanding Allocation Process

I understand that puppies are not made in a factory, but left to the chance of Mother Nature. We cannot produce puppies by custom order. My list of preferences may or may not be met within a particular litter. I also understand that temperament is most important to Sunrise Australian Labradoodles when matching puppies to families rather than physical traits. Sunrise Australian Labradoodles understands that when purchasing a puppy, it is desirable to state some preferences about the puppy. Sunrise Australian Labradoodles feels personality and size are important factors to consider and other cosmetic traits are of less importance. I am open-minded and flexible in regards to my puppy's color, size and gender within a particular litter knowing that this will be easier to find a good personality match for my home and family dynamic. I understand that the more particular I am with physical preferences, the more difficult it will be to find a good match. Also, I understand that Sunrise Australian Labradoodles has the right to reserve any puppy for breeding that they choose.

Sunrise Australian Labradoodles allows customers to choose their top three puppies in order of preference. Then, Sunrise Australian Labradoodles based on information within the application and results of temperament testing and personality evaluations performed at 6 weeks of age will allocate puppies with preference given to the three puppies chosen. I agree to this process and understand that I will not be guaranteed any of the three puppies I choose. I know this will ensure that the puppies are placed according to their personalities and not their looks based on pictures and one visit. I understand that Sunrise Australian Labradoodles is very successful with this method and I trust their process completely.

By signing below, I acknowledge having read this and that I agree with this allocation process.
